NOTE

The purpose of the present exhibition is to show fine impressions of as many as possible of the important examples of the etched work of Rembrandt, and to illustrate adequately both his range and power in etching. It is not for lack of material that the display is limited in numbers. While a complete exhibition of original impressions is impossible, yet from the private collections generously placed at the service of the Club, a more extended exhibition could have been made. The result, however, would not have been more representative of the artist's work.

As is generally known, wide differences of opinion exist among recognized authorities concerning the genuineness of certain prints attributed to Rembrandt. The discussion which has followed the agitation of the subject by Sir Francis Seymour Haden, has led to the definite exclusion of a large number of etchings included in the earlier catalogues. Regarding others, the work of investigation and criticism still continues. Bartsch, in 1797, placed the total number of etchings and dry points by Rembrandt at 375. Middleton (now Middleton-Wake), in 1878, questioned the genuineness of all but 329. Michel, in 1893, with hesitation in some cases, settled upon 270. Von Seidlitz, in 1895, reached the conclusion that only 260 could with certainty be credited to Rembrandt. Further comment on this subject is not made here, since it is not deemed to be the mission of the Grolier Club to undertake work which may be regarded as more properly within the province of a public institution possessed of a permanent collection of prints.

In the various catalogues of Rembrandt's etchings, conflicting views have resulted in differences of classification and numbering. In the present catalogue, Dutuit has been followed in determining states as well as in the classification according to subjects. Twelve divisions are made as follows: (1) Portraits of Rembrandt; (2) Subjects from the Old Testament; (3) Subjects from the New Testament; (4) Pious Subjects; (5) Allegorical, Historical and Fancy Subjects; (6) Beggars; (7) Free Subjects and Academic Figures; (8) Landscapes; (9) Portraits of Men; (10) Fancy Heads of Men; (11) Portraits of Women; (12) Studies of Heads and Sketches. This is an earlier classification than that adopted by Middleton-Wake, who placed all the prints under four heads, namely: (1) Studies and Portraits; (2) Biblical and Religious Subjects; (3) Fancy Subjects, and (4) Landscapes.

While the present exhibition is notable as a whole, yet some of the impressions are worthy of special remark. Such are those of "Christ Healing the Sick" (the hundred-guilder print), "Christ Preaching," "Christ Before Pilate" (D. 83), one of six impressions known to exist; the portraits of Clement de Jonghe, Van Tolling, Old Haaring, Young Haaring, Burgomaster Six, Jan Sylvius; and the landscapes known as "The Three Trees," "The Three Cottages," "Landscape with a Cottage and Dutch Hay Barn," and "Landscape with a Flock of Sheep." It may be thought invidious to mention any impressions as excelling where so many others are also fine, but those mentioned are among the more important in subject as well as quality.

Important and extensive private collections of Rembrandt's etchings, some of them vying with great public collections, exist in Europe and in this country, notably those of M. Edmond de Rothschild, of Paris, Mr. George W. Vanderbilt, of Biltmore, North Carolina, and Mr. Theodore Irwin, of Oswego, New York.

Rembrandt's etched work substantially complete is accessible only in great public collections:—In the British Museum at London, the Royal Museum at Amsterdam, the National Library at Paris, the Imperial Museum at Berlin, The Albertina and Imperial Museum at Vienna, the Royal Museum at Dresden, and perhaps other museums in Europe, and the Museum of Fine Arts at Boston. Unfortunately, the City of New York has no important public collection of prints; the comparatively few prints in the possession of the Metropolitan Museum of Art having never reached the dignity of a collection. It is hoped, however, that through provision for a print department in the New Public Library, this city may, in the course of time, possess such a public collection as will be worthy of the metropolis of this country.

Doubts exist regarding the dates of Rembrandt's birth and death.

Orlers and Van Leeuwen say that he was born in 1606, and Sir F. Seymour Haden (with whom Messrs. Michel and Colvin agree) gives reasons for being of the same opinion. Others say that 1608 was the year. Mr. Middleton-Wake, however, is quite positive that Vosmaer's date of 1607 is correct.

Nearly all writers and commentators are agreed that Rembrandt was born at Leyden, and that the day of his birth was the 15th of July, and that he died in October, 1669, at Amsterdam, where he was buried in the Wester Kerk on October 8th.

It may be noted that the earliest date found upon any of his etchings is 1628, while he was still at Leyden, and that the latest is 1661.

The student is referred to the following authorities which may be consulted with special reference to the life of Rembrandt as well as his etched work:
